The winner of numerous awards, including the Ahmed Attia Award for the Dialogue of Cultures (2012, Spain), Best Film of the Rabat International Film Festival for Human Rights (2012, Morocco), Best Documentary at the Jewish Eye Festival (2012, Israel), and the Eden Award for Best Documentary at the Lumières d’Afrique Festival (2013, France), this documentary follows the Moroccan director Kamal Hachkar’s search for the Jewish community that left his home town of Tinghir, Morocco in the 1960s and emigrated to Israel. Through interviews with Muslims and Jews who share a common identity as Moroccan Berbers, Hachkar reveals a rich history of cooperation between these communities and the explores the positive and negative effects of the community’s relocation on Jews and Muslims alike.
